Introduction

Always in life but especially in school, we learn the things that let us work best. There's a whole program of supports, conditions, foods, and circumstances that allow us to be creative. There are the tools taught and given to us by our departments—the tools of the trade.

And then there's everything else that's essential to getting work done: friends, clubs, obsessions, and activities. All these things are essential to a rich and fruitful creative life. So, with all that in mind...

What's in your toolkit?

Foreword

by Mike Fink

Professor
Literary Arts + Studies

As a boy, I would walk to Saturday classes and like a mouse make my way underground through cellar tunnels or along narrow alleyways connecting campus to museum to see the grand silence of the Buddha, the eternity of the Mummy, the seasonal Santa making his elegant and elfin way across a smoggy London skyline, wearing a green jacket but a scarlet cap in a moonlit sleigh led by superbly rendered reindeer.

I would gape in wonder at these fixed entities of art. And then I would make a boyish effort to draw a human figure with "weight on the feet," to spin a vase, or to render with a stick of charcoal a stuffed specimen of wildlife in the Nature Lab.

In my college years, I studied poetry, even American literature translated into French, at the Sorbonne in Paris.The theme of those years was... Regionalism. Be where you are. Salute what and who you are. Write your name, but with a handwriting more careful and with more flourishes and curlicues than you learned in grammar school. But arts and crafts were intrinsic to my early years. My mother's sketches. My uncle's murals. My immigrant grandparents' skills in textiles, upholstery, carpentry. I was thus imbued with a special regard for design, and my childhood house was quite a bit like a part of RISD, a prelude. So after gaining my degrees in the "humanities," I arrived here as an instructor at the very start of the liberal arts within a college of design.

"How have the students changed during your tenure?" posed the editors who shaped this publication. I tried, among the chairs in my office and at the tables in Café Pearl, to come to terms with the idea of "globalization," policies both financial and perhaps philosophical as well, to widen the walls of the campus from the local and intimate to those of the great world beyond this small and "lively experiment" within the Union. Our undergraduates speak many languages, have names derived from a range of resources, and go forth to contribute to many communities. The Regionalism of my generation has faded as travel has become common, and the coffeehouses have logos that transform the exotic into the ordinary.

I like to claim that I have had only one single student in all my more than sixty years of serving within the teaching trade. That student is... Me, myself. I learn from the skills of my students. I also enjoy the fantasy that I have no idea what it is I am supposedly teaching. "Ask the alums, not me!" I say, not to annoy or evade, but because it is true! Yes, I teach Birds and Words and With a Pen of Light and Writing with Your Feet. Fancy, whimsical titles for the electives that center on the books, themes, movies, guests, and routines of my life, all inspired by my childhood, neighbors, librarians, aunts and uncles... In short, I teach myself and hope there might be some value in the close attention I pay to the studio output I admire from you, both in words and in artists' books.

You have the talents you brought to these lovely, haunted, miniature realms here among these rivers with their gulls, swans, ducks, sparrows. You came here seeking... What? The tools to have and to hold, with which to launch a future? A pathway to follow like a poet, "a road less traveled" by which I mean, more individual? Don't conform, join, or shout. Listen and look and ponder and wonder. And come back and smile and sigh or frown and consider, once you grab your RISD degree in whatever form it may take.

From the mix of art and the best of the local and the global you will take and make what you will, and the planet will benefit from your contributions and migrations. We all have our rendezvous with destiny.

Dear FAV class of 2019,

You are amazing.

As you shift your focus, from being a RISD student towards being maker out in the larger world, I encourage you to value every scale of making. From tiny marks you make on a page every day, to the significant accomplishments that you will achieve over time — all of it is important.

Time is your material. Shape your time into to the life you want to lead.

Please stay in touch,
Sheri

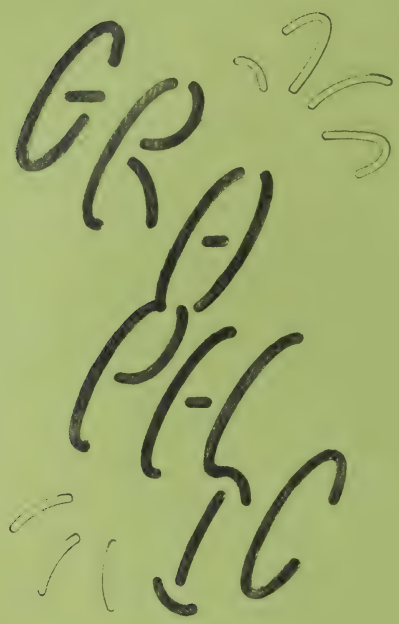
Graphic Design



There are many reasons not to do things. Things — like calling my uncle on his birthday, or going to a friend's opening, or cancelling the Hulu membership, or making 'my own' work, or even writing this brief text for the yearbook. It's really not for lack of interest, that things don't get done. With this yearbook text, I've been having a hard time thinking of a good concept. I've been worried that writing something bad is worse than writing nothing at all. Am I really going to submit a half-work, a paragraph that predictably gushes about this year's Graphic Design graduates?

The big concepts have come and gone. The stuff of genius, like: an ascii art submission. Or, an edited version of a previous letter. I thought about giving my space to someone who could use the space. I considered making an emoji to communicate love for the college graduate (a heart with graduation cap). I spent time getting into the editorial mindset; asking Julian for the concept of this year's edition. I sought clarification of purpose (should this text inspire, be witty, be self-deprecating).

What is the winning formula here? What exactly is this text supposed to say anyway? What are other Department Heads doing? I should probably look at a bunch of these from previous years. How long should it be anyway? Surely I have more time or some way out of this.

My best advice is always to start the "thing" as soon as possible and to see where it goes. My conversations with my uncles always go to unexpected places. Going to a friend's opening leads me to new ideas and deeper relationships. And in the case of this letter, I really need to push it forward. I'll start with how proud I am of the Graphic Design students. They made a bunch of meaningful work and friendships over these past few years.

The exhibitions this year were amazing. You made a lot more than individual pieces of design. You made the Department worth showing up to. This place without you is not a place at all (come by in June sometime). I'm proud of each and every one of you for being willing to face yourselves in your own work — whether you finished all the things you wanted to finish or not. Pat yourselves on the back. Getting to the end is an accomplishment in and of itself.

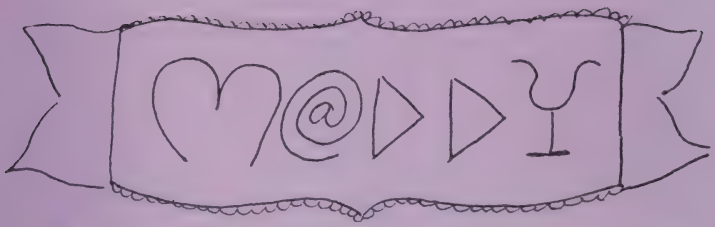
In Loving Memory of



Drawing of Maddy's name was found in her sketchbook, drawn by Maddy Parrasch in 2018.

Maddy Parrasch
1995 – 2018

Afterword

By Rosanne Somerson

President of Rhode Island School of Design

Toolkits are essential not just for a creative practice, but a successful life. Over your RISD years, we've tried to furnish you with the tools you'll need to become original, resourceful, and unflaggingly determined artists and designers. Along life's journey, you will no doubt acquire — and master — new and unexpected tools, and so amass an ever larger and more diverse kit.

My toolkit started to expand not long after I arrived at RISD. As a freshman, I thought a camera and a set of lenses would be the tools with which I would make a career. By the time I graduated, furniture making had become the focus of my creative practice, and my most cherished tools were sharp chisels and spokes haves, but also my sketchbook where ideas ruminated.

As is the way with life, there were many career twists and turns ahead. I became a furniture designer and maker with my own studio business; embarked on a complementary career as a RISD professor, launching the Furniture Design Department; segued into academic administration, and now serve as the 17th president of our much loved and lauded school.

When negotiating these new terrains, I repeatedly found myself recalling an assignment from my undergrad years, called fittingly enough "Design Toolkit." It required my classmates and me to each design an actual toolbox that a randomly chosen classmate would be tasked with making. The assignment also required being doubly astute, as you not only had to design a functional and personal toolbox, but then figure out the simplest way of explaining its fabrication through written and visual directions. I was lucky and got a gifted partner who beautifully fabricated my complex toolbox in sheet metal and I still remember how excited

I was to see my design come to accurate life!

What's interesting looking back on that assignment is that its lessons have been lifelong. Not only did I learn how tricky it can be to clearly articulate every aspect of a complex idea, but also how much more one can learn about neglected details or decisions when elucidating that idea to another. I've used this knowledge in all of my career incarnations, but possibly more than ever in my current post. Successfully communicating a vision is vital, not only in achieving others' support, but perhaps more importantly, in gaining their creative engagement and inclusive voices.

I'm willing to wager that whatever career path you pursue, the RISD tools that you will use most frequently will be those that help you think, create, and communicate your ideas clearly and compellingly to others. They are the most basic, but perhaps the most critical instruments for success.

Special thanks to

Kim Almeida and Erika Paradis of RISD's Center for Student Involvement for management, support, and candy.

David Kim from RISD Co-Works for his help in fabricating our stencils.

RISD Graphic Design for providing us with their lighting studio.

Jay Buckley from Meridian Printing for his sustained, enthusiastic help in printing each class's yearbook.

P.S. The stencil on the spine of this book is removable.
